

Ngombor Community Feeding Program

April 2026 report

Background

Ngombor Community Development Alliance is a registered, non-profit organization based in Nebbi District, Northwest Uganda, focused on establishing a sustainable permaculture model farm and fostering community-led development. Founded in 2025, we aim to empower local communities through sustainable agriculture. We have a vision to create an empowered, a prosperous community in greater Nebbi, in Northwest Uganda, we are committed to fostering holistic rural community development through community engagement and innovation.

Community Feeding Program

During the month of April, we embarked on a community feeding program in which community members, including our famer group members, come together at the farm to share meals together. We provide breakfast, group training and then lunch. This will be done every third Wednesday of the month. Members volunteer to do the cooking and bring in equipment from home to cook and serve the food.

Ngombor community members bring in equipment from home to cook with and volunteer to do the cooking for our new monthly community feeding program.

Objectives

The overall objective of the feeding program is, to bring the community members together to share meals and learn how to apply regenerative agriculture using permaculture principles.

Other Objectives

- To interact and share meals in a communal way
- To equip the participants with knowledge and skills for designing their individual farms using permaculture design principles and ethics
- To learn how to apply permaculture principles and ethics in various aspects of life, for instance in food production, home design, and economic enhancement by understanding patterns in nature and utilizing them in design
- To equip the participants with the knowledge and skills that foster mindset of designing solutions that work in harmony with nature and address societal challenges by planning for water management, soil health, and earthworks
- Encourage the community to engage in regenerative agriculture in order to enhance food security while mimicking nature and conserving the environment

Methodology

The meeting was interactive and participatory. It all started with a farm tour followed by discussion on permaculture ethics.

Achievements

- At least 36 people turned up for meeting and they were very excited about the program
- People had enough food to eat and they all went back satisfied and happy
- It created a community cohesion and a good public relation for Ngombor CDA in the neighborhood
- It was a good experience and approach in building the community interest and mindset about regenerative agriculture

Challenges

- Some of the community members came late, while some did not bring their utensils
- There were not enough seats for everyone and the space was not enough to accommodate all the people who turned up
- The day was too sunny and hot, which created discomfort

Mitigation

- The chairperson (Laurine) urged the members to come on time to the next meeting so that we can move at the same pace
- We improvised papyrus mats for people to sit on
- We plan to clear a nearby area that will provide enough space and shade to accommodate all the members

This has been a very exciting experience. Of the groups I have been a member to; none of them has ever introduced such innovation of bringing the community members to share a meal together.

Quotes:

Candhanu: This has been a very exciting experience. Of the all groups I have been a member to; none of them has ever introduced such innovation of bringing the community members to share a meal together.

Charity: When we first joined this group it seemed like any other group but we are getting to learn that this is an exceptional, please convey our appreciation to the sponsors.

Denis: I have never had a community siting with a decent meal of this kind all my life, thanks to Ngombor for this initiative.

Wilfred: I think this kind of program is what other NGOs need to adopt if their activities is to impact on the community, I wish this could be more frequent.

Conclusion:

This was our first activity of its kind and it was a super success, with 36 members attending, 30 being from our farmer group and 6 people from the surrounding community; we expect the number rise in the next one. During the meeting we had a farm tour, discussed ethics of permaculture which include Earth Care, People Care and Fair Share. All the members were excited and ready to learn; I am certain that as we go along they will be able to carry the knowledge acquired and apply it on their individual farm land.

I think this kind of program is what other NGOs need to adopt if their activities is to impact on the community, I wish this could be more frequent. - Wilfred
